too;
For above where they lay in their fearful rest
The face of the waters in smiles was drest.
I trembled, alas! for the beautiful bark,
For a storm arose and the night grew dark;
The moon hid her face in an angry cloud
And the breakers, impatient, now reased alo
The tempest raged in its gloom afar,
And there was not the sight of a single star!
O, what could the fate of the brightest be
In an hour like this on a treacherous sen!
The storm was spent, the bashed waters sleep

The storm was spent, the hearder stept, And the moon toked down from the heaves and wep!

For the beautiful bank in the tempests' shock Was cast but a wreck on a frowning rock!
